MONTHLY SUMMARY

The Munro Global Growth Fund returned 0.0% for the month of April, comprising a return of -0.4% from equities and 0.4% from currency. The MSCI AC World Index (AUD) meanwhile returned 2.6% for the month, with a 1.9% move in equities and 0.7% from currency.

April saw a rotation of market leadership by geography, with the US S&P 500 up a modest 0.4%, while the European STOXX index rose 4.6% and the Japanese TOPIX climbed 3.6%. There was also a rotation by style and sector, with Value outperforming Growth; and Energy significantly outperforming for the month, with the oil price hitting three-year highs.

Relative underperformance for the month was driven predominately by positioning and a strong focus on capital protection post the volatility of March. The Fund is overweight US markets and specifically US technology holdings, which suffered rotation over the month to under-owned parts of global equity markets. Elsewhere the Fund spent heavily on downside protection over the month to minimise a potential draw down. From a stock specific basis, positive performance was driven by long-term holdings, Thule, Amazon and Kingspan that all reported strong earnings. Negative contributors were several short positions in the European consumer space, such as Hugo Boss and Restaurant Group that both squeezed higher; and Goldman Sachs, the US-listed Investment Bank.

MONTHLY OUTLOOK

The story for 2018 so far is one of equity markets de-rating. If we exclude currency effects, the MSCI World AC Index is flat for 2018, despite strong earnings growth in most regions. Taking the US S&P 500 in isolation, we estimate the 12-month forward P/E multiple of the market has fallen from 18.3x in early January to 16.2x in late April. Markets generally de-rate because they become concerned about future earnings estimates and in this case, we have some sympathy with Mr Market's view.

The list of issues threatening future earnings growth is growing and includes interest rate hikes, raw materials inflation, trade wars, big tech regulation and the turnover of the US Administration. Of this list, our biggest concern centres on the pace of rising interest rates and the ongoing US / China trade dispute. Near term we have chosen to reduce our overall exposure to equity markets in both net and gross terms, with put option protection also in place. Bottom-up we remain excited about the earnings growth characteristics of key Fund holdings, but we recognise that market de-ratings are a process that needs to be worked through over time before earnings growth can re-assert its dominance as a market driver.

While, it is frustrating that share prices for many of our companies have not reacted more positively to recent strong earnings reports, this dynamic does ultimately create somewhat of a 'coiled spring' for stocks for when the dark clouds are lifted.

THULE GROUP

Thule Group contributed 30bps positive performance for April. Swedish listed Thule Group delivered its first quarter results on April 26 which demonstrated strong consumer growth particularly its core cargo boxes / roof rack market and in the European RV market. Overall Thule Group was able to grow its top line over 5%, and operating profit by 10% year on year.

Like management, we are most excited by Thule's new growth opportunities particularly in a new area it calls 'Active with Kids'. Thule has recently diversified into outdoor prams and strollers designed for specific outdoor activities such as biking, running and skiing. This is the fastest growing segment for the company, growing at approximately 50% per annum. The company is also becoming increasingly profitable, in the first quarter Thule registered an EBIT margin of 19.2%, showing discipline on its cost structure and the improved profitability mix from the higher margin 'Active with Kids' division.

We have held Thule in the Munro Global Growth Fund from its inception in August 2016 and continue to like the company's compelling offering in what we see as a long runway for growth as consumers globally become more active.

KION GROUP

Kion Group released results during April and unfortunately it was the second result in a row that fell short of expectations. We initially bought into the German forklift maker on the back of its acquisition of Dematic, the world's largest warehouse automation player. The company had convinced us that the combination of electric and eventually autonomous forklifts with first class warehouse automation would see them positioned as a key beneficiary of global retailers moving into e-commerce. E-Commerce requires first class and timely fulfilment and consequently we expected an accelerated spend on warehouse automation from which Kion should ultimately benefit.

Unfortunately, the Dematic acquisition has been plagued by problems from the start, firstly from a difficult ramp up of manufacturing facilities, to now slowing or stalling order growth. The lumpy nature of Dematic's orders has us concerned that major E-commerce players such as Amazon have significant pricing power in this space, while smaller players simply don't have the appetite to make large investments. Regardless, after two downgrades to guidance based on the order backlog, we have lost confidence in the company's ability to grow earnings over the medium term and subsequently exited the position.
